History of Derry Township.

The first white settler in this Township was W. Isiah Cooper, in 1826, who made the first improvement on Section 21, and built the first house. D. W. Howard was the second, and made improvements on Section 35. William Hornback, Charles Hoskins and Charles Martin were early settlers, but they are all gone except Charles Hoskins and Wm. Hornback who live in the Township. The first death was that of James Hornback. Thomas Proctor was the first Justice of the Peace. Rev. Lorenzo Daw preached the first sermon in the year 1830, at the house of James Hornback, at which time he baptized Mr. Hornback. The first school house was built on Section 20, in the year 1837. The first marriage was that of Enock Cooper to Miss Esther Cooper (adopted daughter of Isiah Cooper), in the year 1839. The first birth was a child of Daniel and Patsia Howard, in 1841. This Township is heavily timbered, with small necks of good rich prairie. The soil is well bedded with gray limestone, plenty of good water which makes it well adapted to farming, and the raising of stock and fruit. It is in a good state of cultivation, and has a large number of good and enterprising farmers.

THE PIKE COUNTY DEMOCRAT
Thursday Morning, July 18, 1889

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Tuesday last Mr. Carlisle Burbridge who had resided in Barry for seven years, fell dead while walking on the street — supposed from heart disease. The deceased was a son of Elder James Burbridge, (better known in the early days as "Father Burbridge";) who removed from Ohio in an early day to Missouri, and came to this county in 1837. He was a brother to Mrs. Gordon of this place, and was aged about 72 years. He had been twice married, but had no family by his last wife. He was buried at Barry yesterday afternoon.

aries among the pioneers. His story was related in the early Burlend home and was remembered by the late Hannah Dalby of Griggsville, a daughter of the Burlends who died in 1913 in her ninetieth year, who recalled how thrilled was her brother John, a rash, impetuous boy who drank in Scholl's tales of Kentucky adventure and then staged his mimic warfare in the neighboring forest. She remembered also having heard Scholl relate the story of Daniel Boone's capture, and that of Stephen Ruddle, pioneer Christian minister who preached the first sermon in North Pike county in his friend Scholl's home in 1826; also, she remembered Scholl telling of the capture by Indians of another Kentucky friend by the name of Burbridge, a brother of an early Pike county preacher.

In an April, 1868, issue of the Pike County Democrat is found a brief obituary notice of Father James Burbridge, who had died March 31 that year, at 84, which says: "Came with father, Rowland Burbridge, from Virginia to Kentucky and fought with Indians—7 boys and 3 girls in family—one boy captured and held five years, escaped with health impaired and died a few years later."

While Mrs. Dalby's recollections (taken down 30 years ago) in most instances are exceedingly clear, there is no doubt that her recital of Scholl's story of his own capture is confused in certain major particulars with his narrative of the capture of Daniel Boone. There are features of the recital, however, that evidently do not derive from the Boone adventure.

Doubtless the most authentic version of Scholl's adventure with the Indians is found in the narrative of the late William C. Dickson of Pittsfield, who not only remembered as a small boy hearing Scholl himself relate the story, but who also heard it at a much later date from Captain Benjamin Matthews, Civil War veteran, to whom Scholl had also related the adventure.

The John B. Matthews family crossed the Illinois river at Phillips Ferry into Pike county in the same year as did the Abraham Scholls (1825). The two families became very intimate. William H. Wilson (who married Abraham Scholl's daughter Matilda) and John B. Matthews' son Ben became partners in a flatboat venture from Phillips Ferry to Galena. John B. Matthews removed to Schuyler county, Missouri, in 1856, and died there in 1857. Ben Matthews, who became the father of the noted Colonel Asa C. Matthews of Pittsfield, had been born in the Boone country in Rowan county, North Carolina, in 1806 (the same year in which William H. Wilson was born), and was 19 when he came with his father to Pike county and located near the Scholls, within the borders of what is now Flint township.

From the various recollections of Abraham Scholl's narrative, it appears that Abraham and two of his brothers (probably Peter and Joseph) went hunting one day in the direction of the Blue Licks. Suddenly in a dense canebrake bordering a creek, they were set upon by wild Shawnees. All three, at the crack of the savages' rifles, dropped to the ground and started worming their way toward the creek, retreat in any direction being cut off by the savages. Nearing the creek (which was at a very high stage, this being the flood year in Kentucky), they were forced to break cover and dash through an open clearing to the water's edge. The two brothers reached the bank safely and plunged in and swam to the other side, holding their guns and ammunition above their heads. Abraham, not so fortunate as his brothers, was struck in the groin by a ball just as he started to plunge in and fell headlong into the water. Only slightly wounded, he regained his feet and attempted to stand off the savages with his gun, which, however, had got wet and was useless. Under a withering fire from his brothers on the opposite bank, he was captured and dragged into the thicket.

Abraham, it appears from the remembered narrative, was for some time in captivity; how long is not known. He evidently was treated with some consideration by his captors. Recovering from his wound, he was put to work by the tribe into whose hands he had fallen, after being taken across the Ohio into the fastnesses of the Indian territory in the Ohio country. His chief task was at the salt licks, where he worked under the watchful eyes of his captors.

Scholl was a Baptist (some say a Dunkard) and was a strict observer of the Sabbath. There is a tradition in the Wilson family, descendants of Scholl, that he introduced an observance of the Sabbath among the Indians. Abraham Key Wilson of Lincoln, Nebraska, a great grandson of Abraham Scholl, says that he always understood that his great grandfather taught the Indians this observance while he was a captive among them. He remembers having heard it related that when the Sabbath came and the Indians ordered him to work, he made them understand by signs and by pointing to the heavens that there was a Power above that forbade work on the Sabbath. So impressed were they with the revelation that they themselves thereafter refrained on the Sabbath day from their wonted tasks.

Like Stephen Ruddle, who was captured at the fall of Ruddle's Station in Kentucky in 1780 and who escaped after 14 years among the Indians, Abraham Scholl eventually eluded his captors and returned to his family in Kentucky; but the manner of his escape, except that it was effected when he was sent to one of the licks to make salt, is a matter of conjecture. The story of the escape as remembered by Mrs. Dalby was that Scholl blinded his guard one day by throwing a handful of powdered tobacco leaves he had managed to secrete in his pocket into the Indian's eyes, taking advantage of the savage's momentary discomfiture to dispose of him and make his escape. This may or may not have been confused in Mrs. Dalby's recollection with a somewhat similar adventure of Daniel Boone in making his escape from a party of Indians who surprised him in his tobacco shed.

That the capture took place in the year 1787 is suggested by a reference in the story to the unusually high waters prevailing in Kentucky at the time, the waters having risen to unprecedented heights in that year. That the time was 1787 is further indicated in Mrs. Dalby's recollection that Scholl told of his own capture having taken place shortly after he had returned from joining in a pursuit of a band of savages that had murdered some settlers and carried away a young female came to Pike county from New York state in 1838. Arriving here he sought a school and began teaching in the pioneer schools of the county when Lyman Scott was school commissioner. Later, under the school commissionership of Colonel D. B. Bush, who became commissioner in 1841, he met and became associated with the self-made scholar, John J. Collard, with whom he formed a lasting friendship.

The late William A. Goodin once related a story of those pioneer teachers, Collard and Hicks. Collard introduced his friend, Dan Hicks, to the members of a country school board. "Is he a fighter?" inquired the school board of Collard. "I'll wager he can lick his weight in wildcats," replied Collard. The school board was skeptical. Hicks didn't look the part. It was a day when it took brawn as well as brain to teach school.

The school board debated. While they were debating a man passed by in a wagon. The board halted him, asked him to alight. "Tell you what we'll do," said the school board to Hicks. "If you can out-wrestle that man, you get the job." "I will do my best," said Hicks.

They went at it. It was nip and tuck. Hicks put up a magnificent fight. It took his burly opponent a long time to throw him. He finally did get the best of Hicks. But the school board was impressed. Hicks had shown plenty of grit. The school board told him the job was his. They told him also that the man with whom he had wrestled was the champion wrestler of the county. The episode not only made Hicks a teacher. It made him a deputy sheriff and sheriff. The story of the wrestling match was long recounted among the people of Pike county.

Colonel Hicks, in October, 1842, married Mary J. Burbridge, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Elder James Burbridge, so well-known in Pike county's early days. She died March 30, 1844, and an only child, Helen M., died at 18. Colonel Hicks afterward married Julia Ann Burbridge, a daughter of Robert Burbridge, and a cousin of his first wife. They were married in 1845 and had seven children, namely: Frances, who married George Barber; Barbara E., who married Henry R. Mills; Florence E., who married Erwin P. Dow; Emma, who married Judge Harry Higbee; Robert Truman, who became cashier of the First National Bank of Pittsfield; Laura, who married Martin S. Frick of Independence, Missouri; and James Wes Hicks.

It is probable that Daniel D. Collard may have been named also, indirectly, for that Dan Collard of the early Missouri border, who was a brother of Joseph Collard, the grandfather of John J. Collard. Joseph and his brother Dan and his sister Mary, who was the wife of William Banks whom she married in Virginia in 1754, came to the Missouri border about 1804 or 1805. There Dan Collard and his brother-in-law settled in the Daniel Boone neighborhood, near present Marthasville, on the trail that led from Boone's settlement to Fort Zumwalt, near present O'Fallon, Missouri.

This Dan Collard was a trapper and furrier. He sold his furs in the town of St. Louis, as did Daniel Boone. He is said to have been killed by border pirates while enroute to St. Louis with an ox-wagon load of furs in 1816. The place of his burial is unknown, as is also the record of his family, if he had one. There is no record of his marriage.

Daniel D. Collard was twice married. His first wife was Fannie Craig of Chicago. They had four children, Arthur, Parley, Ora Emma and Lillian Collard.

Arthur Collard, the first born, is among the missing, his address unknown.

Parley Collard died of appendicitis at the age of nine at Blue Springs, Missouri.

Ora Emma Collard, who was named for her aunt, Ora Emma (Collard) Hughes, married John Tyler Waugh. He died at Pleasant Hill April 5, 1935 and is buried in Crescent Heights cemetery at Pleasant Hill.

Lillian Collard married Frank Cummins and they reside at Blue Springs, Missouri.

Daniel D. Collard's second wife was Mrs. Delilah Carpenter of Higginsville, Missouri. She had a daughter, Ella Carpenter, who married Arch Williams. She lives at Lexington, Missouri. Her husband is deceased.

Ora Emma Waugh, daughter of Daniel D. Collard, made her home for a long time with her father's sister, Mrs. Martin H. (Eliza Jane Collard) Hulshult, in Pleasant Hill. Mrs. Hulshult at her death left her home in Pleasant Hill to her niece, Ora Emma.

Mrs. Waugh teaches in a grade school at Independence, Missouri. She, too, is a member of the teaching dynasty established by her grandfather, John J. Collard. She formerly taught school in Pike county. Her first school was at Fruit Ridge. She taught also at Bayville and Martinsburg in Pike county. She was latest in a line of Collard teachers at Bayville, which included her grandfather, John J. Collard, her uncle, John Ray Collard, and her aunt, Eliza Jane, and Mary Elizabeth Collard.

Daniel D. Collard died at Lexington, Missouri, on March 16, 1905.

William Webb Collard, ninth of John J. Collard's children, was born at Pleasant Hill July 27, 1859. Collard descendants believe that this child died in infancy, as the family record contains no further mention of him and leaves his death date blank.

Ora Emma Collard, tenth of the Collard children, was born in Pleasant Hill August 17, 1861. She was the latest survivor of the family of eleven children, her death occurring at Blue Springs, Missouri, May 31, 1938.

Ora Emma Collard attended Pittsfield high school when she was a girl, during which time she lived with her cousin by marriage, Mrs. Ellen J. Doss, wife of Dr. Charles H. Doss. Mrs. Doss was the former wife of William Riley Wilson, a son of David Wilson and Isaphena Collard, the latter an elder sister of John J. Collard. Riley Wilson was circuit clerk of Pike county from 1880 to 1884. He died in Chicago April 3, 1893.

Mrs. Doss before her first marriage was Ellen J. Fry, a daughter of Harrison and Matilda Fry of Pike county, Missouri. She married Riley Wilson May 13, 1870. She married Dr. C. H. Doss in 1896, following the death in January, 1895, of his first wife, who was Margaret Thresher, a daughter of J. M. Thresher of Morgan county, Illinois, by whom he had 11 children.

Ora Emma Collard married George E. Hughes August 27, 1881 and they went to Blue Springs, Missouri, where she died in 1938 and where he still resides. They had two children, Lester H. and Clara. Lieutenant Les-

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Tuesday last Mr. Carlisle Burbridge who had resided in Barry for seven years, fell dead while walking on the street — supposed from heart disease. The deceased was a son of Elder James Burbridge, (better known in the early days as "Father Burbridge,) who removed from Ohio in an early day to Missouri, and came to this county in 1837. He was a brother to Mrs. Gordon of this place, and was aged about 72 years. He had been twice married, but had no family by his last wife. He was buried at Barry yesterday afternoon.
