Epitaff.

Rest at last dear suffering Mother.
All thy pains forever o'er Weary days and night of anguish Thou shalt know them never more.

Gone from those who loved thee fondly Gone to one who loved thee more.
Gone to join in bliss unchanging Loved ones who have you before.

Near Dover, Lafayette county, Mo., of cerebro-spinal meningitis, July 30th 1873, at the age of twenty-four years, Maria J. Caldwell, wife of Jas Caldwell, and daughter of Washington + Maria Coz.
Early in life, with the freshness of its morning scarcely beyond her grasp, its springtime but just dismissed, and the blooming beauty of the glorious summer lying all about her pathway, she heard the summons of her Heavenly Father saying "come up higher," and though a multitude of friends, kind parents, and oh! saddest of all a husband and four helpless children, were so many silken ties to bind her here, yet the golden links that drew her heavenward were the stronger, and unmurmuringly she obeyed the summons, and now, let us hope, repose upon the bosom of her Savior, where suffering and sorrow can never intrude.

The writer of this was with her very frequently during her illness, and had frequent occasion to observe how her christian patience and beauty of character shone out amid all her protracted and severe sufferings.

Her disease was from the beginning of the most malignant type, and though the monster seemed to yield to the careful treatment, the system was too much shattered to rally. She is life universally beloved & is in death universally regretted. The freed immortal soul Basks now in heaven's light

No more shall suff'ring flesh control Its upward, onward flight;

For 'th storm which we call life is o'er,

But ye who mourn her here below.

May meet her on the golden shore.
